Is her and when did he die ?" she asked, "Is he? and when did he die?" she asked, and her face assumed an asken huc. But her color returned at once and her eyes seemed to extress joy and satisfaction when the officers said that Webster hadn't been caught yet.

Then she seated herself on the sofa and told this story to the Coroner:

"Mr. Goodwin seemed to be attracted towards me from the day we moved in here, but I gave him no encouragement.

"One night about a month ago, while I was lying on this sofa asteep, Mr. Goodwin forced himself into my room. He was drunk. A man named lifeord accompanied him.

GOODWIN'S LIFE OF LUXURY.

Goodwin's Life of Luxury.

Goodwin had surrounded himself with every luxury. He evidently lived a life of ease and pleasure. The wails were hung with rare works of art, and the books on the shelves and tables indicated that their owner was a man of high literary tastes.

One of them, "Chateaubriand's Atala," had the word "Mother" written in one corner. Several of the books were personal glits from their authors to Goodwin, one a book of poems from Francis S. Smith.

There were scores of castly little knick-knacks and tollet articles strewn around, which gave the room more the appearance of a bouldoff of a pretty woman than that of a

IGNORED THE REGULATIONS.

The Excise Board, or rather a majority, consisting of Commissioners Fifzpatrick and Koch, has stirred up a hornets' nest by licensing Isaac Bochm's new liquor store at 1681 Park avenue, about one hundred feet from St. Paul's Academy and only half a block om St. Paul's Catholic Church, in East One Hundred and Eighteenth street.

Rev. Father McQuirk protested that the new saloon was nearer than the regulations new saloen was nearer than the regulations allowed, and Commissioner Fitzpatrick replied that regulations were not law, and the Board might beense a saloon next door to a church or school if it saw itt.

President Meakim voted against the license, as it was so near the church and school, and because two other corners of Park avenue and one Hundred and Eighteenth street airendy had saloons. He told for McQuirk so, but he was only a hopeless minority against what he characterized as "an outrage of deceners."

Two pet lons are in circulation protesting against this new saloon, one signed by property owners, the others by St. Paul's parish-
